The Marathon Mystery

A Story of Manhattan

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Helliday Case"

Copyright, 1924, by Henry Holt and Company

"So that I on Thompson's arm was the initial of his real name," observed Godfrey. "I thought it was; it had been there a long time, and an effort had been made to erase it. After a man has started on the crooked path he doesn't want any tattoo marks on him; they make identification too easy. For Johnson, then, we'll hereafter refer to Thompson."

"I nodded; I was beginning to be convinced."

"Well," continued Godfrey, "Tremaine and Thompson, then, were arrested in New York July 23, 1885, at a low resort where they were having a croquet. They had beaten and robbed another sailor. It seems that nothing was left of the 50,000 francs, and naturally Tremaine found it difficult to go honestly to work again. The fourth clipping, undated, but probably some months later, shows that Tremaine and Thompson were sentenced to three years each in Sing Sing. But they didn't stay there so long," he added, turning to the next clipping, "at least Tremaine didn't. On the night of Jan. 2, 1886, in the midst of a tremendous snowstorm they managed to hide themselves in one of the workshops and afterward to scale the outer wall. In the morning Thompson was found at the foot of the wall with his head cut open and nearly frozen. Tremaine got clear away. Thompson was brought around with the greatest difficulty and would say nothing except to indulge in terrible imprecations against his companion. You see," concluded Godfrey, looking up, "we begin to get at the motive."

"Yes," I agreed; "it's very plain, now you've started on the right track. It's a good deal like Columbus' egg."

Godfrey smiled and turned to the sixth clipping, the longest of them all. "It's that way with most mysteries," he said, "and here's the internal evidence that all this theorizing is pretty straight. It's the clue, too, which we've been seeking so long."

"I explained Miss Croft's presence here?" I asked, intensely interested and deeply stirred.

"Just that," he said, and shot me a triumphant glance. "Let us see if you can catch it. The clipping is in French, and, though my French isn't of the highest order, I can get the sense of it pretty well. It is dated Surinnes and is evidently a letter from a provincial correspondent to a Paris newspaper, who, like most other provincial correspondents, is delightfully vague. However, I gather from it that on the night of Sept. 16, 1891, a beautiful young English girl—name not given—ran away from the convent school of the Sacred Heart at Surinnes and that the next morning she was safely married to a 'gallant Frenchman'—Tremaine, of course—by the cure of the little village of Petite Colombes. The marriage was quite regular—though no doubt the cure's fee was larger than usual—for the banns had been published as required."

"But still," I objected, "I don't see that that explains anything."

"Let me help you. It was this clipping I happened to look at first the night we found the body. I read two or three lines about, then Simmonds put it back in the pocket. It must have been those few lines which told Miss Croft the nature of the clippings and their importance to her. The date line would have been enough to do that. Besides, if she'd already known of them she'd have taken them before we got here."

"You mean Miss Croft is the girl who ran away with Tremaine? But, then, she couldn't have been more than ten or twelve years old in 1891."

"Eleven," corrected Godfrey, and I was struck by the radiant expression of his face as he took a yellow paper from his pocket. "Let me read you two sentences from this old report concerning the Croft family. You ought to have recalled them, my dear Lester."

"Go ahead," I said helplessly.

"Eldest daughter, Edith, born in France, Aug. 23, 1874. Educated at school there, but broke down from overstudy and returned to Beckingham, Religion, Catholic. Now," he read aloud, "she understood who it was married Tremaine at Petite Colombes in 1891."

At last I saw it, and I could only sit and stare at him, marveling at my own stupidity. This was the key to the whole enigma. Miss Croft had taken her sister's place, had tried to buy him off to get him out of her sister's way. It was Tremaine who had opened the door; it was Tremaine whom she had come to the Marathon to meet. But—and I started upright—since they were Catholics, only his death could release Mrs. Delroy! Perhaps it was Thompson, after all, and his death had released her! But, no, and in an instant the whole terrible position of the elder woman burst upon me. She was not Delroy's wife; she was

"So," I said honestly, "Tremaine is, then, the true husband of Mrs. Delroy?"

"Let us finish the story of the clippings before going into that," suggested Godfrey. "I confess I don't quite see the bearing of this next one. It's a New York dispatch, perhaps to a London paper, under date of Feb. 18, 1892, and chronicles the loss of the bark Centaur, with all on board, off the coast of Martinique. The Centaur was bound from Marseilles to Fort-de-France, with a cargo of wines and muslins. Let us leave it for a moment and pass on to the next one, which is the last."

"This is dated Sydney, Australia, Oct. 13, 1895, and relates how a daring scheme to rob the Bank of New South Wales was frustrated by a sailor who had been a member of the gang, but who got frightened and informed the police. The ringleader, a Frenchman, was captured and would receive a term of years in prison. There are four copies of this clipping, which no doubt means that it is the one which Thompson was sometimes in the habit of sending to Tremaine to remind him of that Australian experience."

"Now, don't you see, we reconstruct the whole story. Tremaine, starting out as a defaulter and robber, escapes from prison, leaving his partner in the lurch, treacherously, no doubt, since it awakened his violent anger. There isn't any hatred more vindictive than that of one criminal toward another who has betrayed him. Tremaine finally goes back to France and succeeds in outwitting Edith Croft, then only about sixteen, in marriage. We know how fascinating he is, and it's not wonderful that he should be able to mislead an inexperienced girl. Of course what he wants is money, and so she writes to her father. He comes for her and takes her home, no doubt paying Tremaine a handsome sum to take himself off—in fact, mortgaging his home to do it."

"Miss Croft gradually recovers; but she is Tremaine's wife. Yet in 1899 she marries Delroy. She must, therefore, have had good reason to leave Tremaine dead."

"Don't you see?" I cried. "That's the meaning of that item about the founding of the Centaur, with all on board. Tremaine was a passenger and she knew it."

"Good!" nodded Godfrey. "That's undoubtedly it. Let me see," and he turned back to the clipping; "that was in 1892. His name, perhaps, appeared among the missing; she waited eight years, and at last, believing his death established beyond a doubt, married again."

"Now let us see what Tremaine was doing. In 1896 he was in Australia, planning a bank robbery. He meets Thompson, descended from his estate of captain to that of common sailor. Tremaine takes Thompson in on the plan, and Thompson, to get even for that treachery at Sing Sing, gives him away. Tremaine, no doubt, got a penitentiary sentence. He probably broke jail again, for in 1899 he appears at Martinique, supposedly from South America. He has considerable money, which he no doubt stole somewhere, and perhaps he chose St. Pierre as a safe place to stay in hiding until the hue and cry after him was over. He would have some acquaintance with the island, if he landed there from the wreck."

"Thompson learns where he is—perhaps even sees him at St. Pierre—and puts a bouquet to his revenge by driving him into his rage by reminding him of that Australian treachery. But at last he sends him a message which brings him to New York."

"Yes," I said, "and I have outgrown my brain in vain trying to imagine what that message could have been."

President Roosevelt received his first endorsement as a Republican Presidential candidate from Representative Gronna from the floor of the House last week. Representative Gronna said that Dakota would send a delegation to the convention to urge his nomination. Representative Gronna was very active in opposing the ship subsidy bill.

Almost Personal

Serial Story No. 27

Some of our merchants are not very busy, so at such times they stand around and talk to their clerks and explain why it is.

They say people are patronizing the Oriental business houses. Then the clerks sympathize and they all talk the matter over with the next customer and deplore the fact that if the haoles continue patronizing Asiatics, American business must go to smash.

I have often heard these kinds of talks taking place and while I was listening to what they had to say I looked with a good deal of interest at the linen they were wearing because the pake who washed it didn't get the bluing scattered evenly and had failed to remove a laundry tape with Chinese characters on it.

At such times I would like to mention that I am in the laundry business, but I am conscious of others' feelings and reserve my say for this space, which belongs to me.

BRUCE HARTMAN.
